An emperor's statue gets its head back

A Danish museum agreed that it had been looted and should be returned to Turkey

An ancient bronze thought to be a likeness of Roman emperor Septimius Severus is to be reunited with its long-lost torso after a Danish museum agreed that its sculpture of a bearded man's head had been looted and should be returned to Turkey.

The torso, which for years remained at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, was returned to Turkey in 2023 after its seizure by investigators who said it had been looted.

Since then, the Turkish government has been petitioning the Ny Carlsberg Glyptotek in Copenhagen, requesting the return of the 2,000-year-old head to complete the statue.

Last week, the Danish museum said its researchers had concluded that the artefact, which has been in its collection since 1970, was likely to have been excavated illegally from Bubon, a site in the southwest of Turkey that investigators say was heavily looted in the 1960s.

Rise and fall of Severus
Severus was a wily general who outmanoeuvred four rivals to assume the emperor's seat, ruling Rome from 193 AD to 211 AD. His intact statue had been part of a group of bronzes that experts believe was set up 2,000 years ago as a shrine to the imperial cult in Bubon. As part of that cult, the emperors were worshipped as gods.

It's not clear whether the torso lost its head when the site was targeted by looters in the 1960s, or whether the separation had occurred centuries, or millennia earlier.

The Danish museum said in its statement that "archival and archaeological studies and technical analyses" of Severus's head had led to its conclusion that it had been looted. The head, it said, "probably belongs to a larger group of bronze sculptures of the Roman imperial family believed to have originated from the so-called Sebasteion—a shrine to the Roman imperial cult—in Bubon."

The bronze head (left) is being returned as experts believe it's part of a sculpture returned by the MET

Circumstantial evidence
For many years, the Glyptotek had said that its ancient head belonged to the torso in the Met and had exhibited them together in Copenhagen in 1979. But in recent years, museum officials expressed scepticism that the two were an exact match, saying in an interview in 2023 that the evidence linking them was "circumstantial and weak".

The Met did not embrace the theory. In the 12 years it held it, the museum called the figure simply a 'Bronze statue of a nude male figure'. The Glyptotek said that while its new research had determined that the head probably originated in Bubon, their experts were not as confident in asserting that it belonged to the body seized from the Met.

The Danish museum said it had purchased the head in 1970 for 365,500 Swiss francs (about $85,000) from Robert Hecht, an American dealer who would become famous—and later infamous—as one of the world's great dealers of antiquities, both looted and legitimate.

Investigators from the Manhattan district attorney's Antiquities Trafficking Unit have seized and returned several other items that experts believe were taken from Bubon, including statues of the emperors Lucius Verus and Caracalla.

New docs reveal legal woes behind Beatles split

Recently found legal documents that shed new light on the demise of The Beatles are set to go on sale at UK auction house Dawsons on December 12.

While creative differences, the strain of stardom and John Lennon's girlfriend Yoko Ono have all been blamed for the Fab Four's break-up, the documents reveal the numerous convoluted legal battles that weighed on the band, from manager Allen Klein's inability to produce accounts for the tax authorities to deciding when

Hidden details
The documents, which were discovered in a cupboard where they had been stored since the 1970s, include copies of The Beatles advisor's minutes of meetings, legal writs and a copy of the band's 1967 'Original Deed of Partnership'.

They show that after manager Brian Epstein died in 1967, the band realised that their money was unaccounted for and that they were being pursued by tax authorities. They also document Paul McCartney's 1970 High Court battle against Klein's hiring. "I could sense panic in the room as more and more complexities came to light. One of the lawyers even suggested during one meeting when they had gone round and round and round in circles: 'Would it be easier if The Beatles just retired?'" shared Denise Kelly, head of Dawsons Entertainment and Popular Culture department.

A 1971 letter written by Lennon to musician Eric Clapton, inviting him to join a "nucleus group" with super-producer Phil Spector, is also set to be auctioned.

Indigo Moves Delhi High Court Against Alleged '6E' Trademark Infringement

Our Bureau

New Delhi: InterGlobe Aviation, which runs the largest airline IndiGo, on Tuesday moved the Delhi High Court alleging trademark infringement of its Air Transport Association code '6E' by Mahindra Electric Automobiles. The airline accused the automaker of using the mark '6E' in its upcoming electric sports utility vehicle (SUV) Mahindra BE 6e, which it claimed to be similar to its trademark '6E.'

Mahindra BE 6e, which has generated buzz for its unique design and tech loaded features, is expected to hit the roads in February next year.

While Justice Amit Bansal

recused himself from the hearing the case, senior counsel Sandeep Sethi informed the court that Mahindra had reached out to the airline on Monday and an effort was being made to discuss the matter.

The case is likely to come up for hearing on December 9.

The Registrar of Trademarks had on November 25 accepted Mahindra Electric's request to register its mark 'BE 6e' in class 12 (vehicles). If registered, Mahindra will be allowed to use 6E for a wide range of motor vehicles and related components, including land vehicles, off-road and utility vehicles, electric and internal combustion engine-powered vehicles, buses, trucks, tractors, and parts. However, the mark cannot be used for two-wheelers and their components.

In response to the Indigo's petition, Mahindra & Mahindra (M&M) issued a clarification to stock exchanges, stating that their mark "BE 6e" differs fundamentally from IndiGo's stand-alone "6E" trademark. The company emphasized that their branding poses no risk of confusion since it represents an electric vehicle rather than an airline service.

FROM OVERALL ALLOCATION OF ₹5.05 LAKH CR...

Delayed Spending by States may Help Govt Save ₹30k cr this FY

Anuradha Shukla

New Delhi: Delayed spending by states and tighter monitoring of usage of funds under centrally sponsored schemes (CSS) could save the Centre about ₹30,000 crore in the overall allocation of ₹5.05 lakh crore for such programmes in the current fiscal year, according to an official.

The Centre is expected to use the savings under CSS to increase spending under other heads.

"We expect the CSS expenditure to be lower than the BE (budget estimates) by ₹28,000 crore to ₹30,000 crore in the current fiscal year," a senior official told ET.

Officials said about ₹17,000 crore may be saved on account of slow progress on spending in some of the flagship schemes due to the Lok Sabha and state elections this year. The Centre is likely to save another ₹3,000 crore by plugging loopholes in various schemes.

The Centre had allocated ₹5.05 lakh crore for CSS in the budget for 2024-25, 9.8% higher than the target in the revised estimates in key flagship centrally sponsored schemes such as Ayushman Bharat - Pradhan Mantri Jan Arogya Yojana (PMJAY) and the Mahatma Gandhi National Rural Employment Guarantee Scheme (MGNREGS). This is almost half of the total capital expenditure for the current fiscal year. Currently, CSSs accounts for 10.4% of the Centre's expenditure budget of ₹48.2 lakh crore for the year.

The official said changes to allocation would be fixed up closer to the budget. "The Centre is nudging states to expedite spending but allocations may still remain unspent," the official said.

The government is already in the process of further rationalising the CSS, including share of funding between the Centre and the states. In March 2015, Prime Minister Narendra Modi had constituted a sub-group of chief ministers on rationalisation of CSS. The Centre has almost halved the number of centrally sponsored schemes to 75 from 130 in 2015. Officials said that some of the ministries are already doing their internal evaluation and may include the recommendation in their demand for funds for the budget for FY25.

Australia Take Confidence from Pink Ball Record: Carey

MELBOURNE: Australia will draw confidence from their exceptional record in day-night Tests and expect to rebound from their Perth setback when they face India in the second match in Adelaide, wicketkeeper Alex Carey has said. Australia have won 11 of their 12 pink ball Tests and all seven they have played at Adelaide Oval, including a victory over India in the last home test series when they skittled Virat Kohli's team for 36. "We're excited. We should take a lot - and we do take a lot - of confidence out of our record from pink ball cricket," Carey told reporters on Tuesday. "It doesn't mean we'll have the success but I think our methods, our style of play and the experience we have with this group, we'll bounce back from Perth. I'm sure India will be confident from the last game as well, so it will be a great contest," added Carey. Reuters

World XI Messi, Ronaldo Only Nominates from Non-European Clubs

Hoofddorp (Netherlands): Lionel Messi and Cristiano Ronaldo are still popular and respected by their fellow players even though they no longer play for European clubs. The 37-year-old Messi and 39-year-old Ronaldo were the only players not with clubs in Europe to be voted on a 26-man shortlist for the world team of the year organized by global players' union FIFPRO on Monday. The other 24 nominees played in the past year with clubs in England, Germany, Spain and France, though Kylian Mbappé was the only French connection after spending last season at Paris Saint-Germain. No player from any Italian club was selected, nor from any club in South America or Africa. Messi, in Major League Soccer with Inter Miami, and Ronaldo, in Saudi Arabia with Al-Nassr, will find out on Dec. 9 if they are in the World XI lineup. AP

Is Guardiola Morphing Into Mourinho?

The Catalan's recent antics make him look like his arch nemesis. He must heed the warning signs before he falls to the same fate

Richard Martin

Before Manchester City headed to Liverpool on Sunday, Pep Guardiola had said "the previous nine years are dead", acknowledging that his glorious record in the past would not protect him if his side's dismal run of form continued. So why then, as his side were on their way to a fourth consecutive Premier League defeat, did he hold up six fingers to the Anfield crowd?

As Guardiola raised one finger for each Premier League title won to Liverpool fans chanting "You're getting sacked in the morning," he was not living by that old business adage about only being good as your last success. Instead, he was using his previous achievements as a comfort blanket in a time of great distress.

There is nothing wrong with being proud of his astonishing achievements. But by pointing to his former successes amid his worst run of form as a coach, Guardiola is beginning to resemble another serial winning manager who lost his way when no one expected it—Jose Mourinho.

TODAY'S EMPIRES, TOMORROW'S ASHES

A fair few City fans were not alive the last time their team lost four Premier League games, in August 2008, just after the club had been taken over by the Abu Dhabi royal family. But they might well remember watching another coach ing empire crumble and see similar patterns of behaviour between Mourinho and their own boss.

The Portuguese won a third Premier League title with Chelsea in 2015, his eighth league crown, and then presided over one of the worst title defences in the league's history. Mourinho became more and more agitated with each defeat, and after losing

A fair few City fans were not alive the last time their team lost four Premier League games. But they might well remember watching another coaching empire crumble and see similar patterns of behaviour between Mourinho and Guardiola four out of the opening eight league games, he fired out a warning to the Chelsea hierarchy. "This is a crucial moment in the history of this club because, if they sack me, they sack the best manager this club has had," he said. But two months later, he was indeed fired.

CALLING OUT HIS PLAYERS

Mourinho would boast about his achievements during good times and bad, whereas Guardiola preferred to praise his players. But now that he has fallen upon bad times, the Catalan is displaying the same traits. He's doing it with a smile, for now, and he has not yet resorted to the dark arts the Portuguese has dabbled in—poking rival coaches in the eye or shouting at referees in car parks. The previous week, Guardiola went on what could be best described as a rant during his press conference before facing Tottenham, telling journalists on more than one occasion: "I'm sorry guys, I won six Premier League titles." He has also criticised his players, something he would very rarely do previously.

Unlike Mourinho, who loved to have a scapegoat, Guardiola has not yet focused on individuals, instead citing collective problems. After the 4-1 thrashing by Sporting CP, he said players were "not emotionally stable". After the 4-0 hammering by Tottenham, he said the team were "fragile". How long before he turns on individuals again?

Two seasons ago, Guardiola called Kalvin Phillips "overweight" and questioned Kyle Walker's tactical intelligence. Phillips never recovered from that public slight, but as City won the treble it did not get much attention. Guardiola's remarks about Walker ended up leading to a remarkable resurgence in the form of the defender, who he begged to stay and who was then made captain. Walker now, however, looks to be on an irreversible decline; could the same thing be happening to Guardiola?
